

Mr. S. Nkosi

35556625@mynwu.ac.za

UTEW 221 V
SU4
AN ETHIC OF CARE
IN EDUCATION.

INFLUENCE OF MANNERS

ETHICS OF CARE

The ethic of care is a moral and ethical framework that emphasizes relationships, empathy, compassion, and the interconnectedness of individuals and communities.

- The philosophical field concerned with what is considered morally good and morally bad is called 'ethics' (Singer, 2022).
- It is the field that looks into the questions regarding what is right and what is wrong behaviour in the world, and how we can go about determining those rights and wrongs.
- If part of our, the educators', task is to develop morally upright and responsible citizens (Sayed & Vellanki, 2013)

Virtue ethics

- Virtue ethics is an ethical theory that emphasizes the formation of morally upright character traits as the cornerstone of moral judgment. The focus of virtue ethics is on the development of moral virtues like honesty, courage, compassion, and integrity rather than rules or consequences.
- Key Points: The core tenet of virtue ethics is that an ethically upright person would always choose the proper course of action and make morally upright decisions. It encourages people to pursue their own ideals of moral perfection because it cares about creating people with noble character qualities. The ethics of Aristotle, which emphasizes the development of virtues, is a well-known illustration of virtue ethics. Kant's categorical imperative.

Deontological ethics

- Deontological ethics, also known as duty-based ethics, is an ethical theory that contends that actions are morally right or wrong depending on how closely they adhere to a set of moral standards or principles, independent of the results. Deontological ethics holds that some behaviours are intrinsically moral or evil, regardless of the results.
- Key Points: Deontological ethics puts a lot of stress on moral obligations, duties, and principles. It contends that some behaviours are inherently moral or immoral, and that people have a responsibility to uphold these moral standards, regardless of the repercussions. A deontological ethical paradigm is exemplified by Immanuel Kant's categorical imperative.

Consequential ethics

- commonly referred to as consequentialism, is a school of thought that assesses the morality of deeds considering their results or repercussions. According to consequentialist ethics, whether a course of action is morally justified or wrong depends on how evenly positive and negative consequences are distributed.
- Key Points: Consequential ethics places a strong emphasis on getting the optimal results, which are frequently quantified in terms of maximizing happiness, well-being, or other beneficial outcomes. Utilitarianism, which aims to promote happiness for all, and ethical egoism, which puts the self's best interests first, are two prominent examples of consequentialism.

TYPES OF ETHICS

OPEN DISCUSSION

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HClxaD4eaCA>

BENEFITS AND IMPACTS OF ETHICS OF CARE

A background image showing numerous skydivers in various poses and colors (red, green, yellow, black) falling against a clear blue sky. The skydivers are scattered across the frame, creating a sense of movement and freedom.

Benefits

- Promotes Empathy: Care ethics encourages individuals to understand and empathize with the perspectives and feelings of others. This leads to increased compassion and sensitivity to the needs of those around us.
- Emphasis on Relationships: The ethics of care places relationships at the forefront of ethical considerations. This emphasis on interpersonal connections fosters trust, empathy, and a sense of community.
- Strengthens Moral Character: By focusing on the development of virtuous character traits, such as compassion, kindness, and responsibility, care ethics contributes to the cultivation of morally virtuous individuals.

Impacts

- Educational Impact: The ethics of care has influenced education, resulting in teaching practices that emphasize empathy, relationship-building, and moral education.
- Enhanced Morality: Care ethics contributes to the development of a more compassionate and morally responsible society by promoting ethical behaviour and a sense of moral duty.
- Social Justice: Care ethics has been influential in discussions of social justice, leading to a greater recognition of the rights and needs of marginalized and oppressed groups..

CONCLUSION

In the word of Nel Noddings "Caring for others is an expression of what it means to be fully human."

Name _____

Signature _____

Date _____

